Annual Flint Jewish Federation/United Jewish Appeal Campaign at Crucial Final Month

The 2009 Flint Jewish Federation/United Jewish Appeal Annual Campaign is in its final month and the next few weeks will determine our ability to fund the needed programs and services the Federation provides, according to Dr. William Bernard, Campaign Chair.

"There is still a long way to go to reach our $300,000 goal, but traditionally the last several weeks of the campaign have produced the best results," stated Bernard.

If you have not made your pledge or if you have not been contacted, please call the Federation office at 810-767-5922.

Please see page 8 for a short synopsis of what the Flint Jewish Federation achieves in our community.

Flint Jewish Federation Interfaith Mission to Israel April 17-27, 2009

If you have been or if you have thought about going to Israel – NOW is the opportunity you don't want to miss. The Flint Jewish Federation will sponsor its now "famous" Interfaith Mission from April 17 to April 27, 2010. The mission is being led by the Flint Jewish Federation Mission Director, Diane Lindholm, whose fame has spread and she has become a very experienced and dynamic mission leader.

The trip will cover a major portion of the State of Israel including 2 nights at the Carlton Hotel in Tel Aviv, 2 nights at Kibbutz Lavi near the Sea of Galilee and 4 nights in Jerusalem at the Imbal Hotel.

All meals (except dinner and lunch) guide and driver, deluxe bus, all admission fees, services and security are included. While the final cost has not been determined, it will be in the area of $3,500-$3,700 per person.

In order to confirm your place on the mission, we are requesting a $500 deposit payable to the Flint Jewish Federation by December 31. This trip will be limited to 25 participants.

Plans and flight arrangements will be coordinated by Diane Lindholm. She can be reached at 810-694-8265 or contact the Flint Jewish Federation at 810-767-5922.

Can Giving Be Fun?

Have you ever purchased and wrapped the 'perfect' gift for your spouse or close friend and watched with wet-lipped excitement as the person tore away the paper? You knew the gift would be a hit, and you could hardly stand it as the anticipation grew.

Then the magic moment came as the box was opened. You delighted in the expression of surprise and joy. You beamed as words of gratitude filled the air. Even though you were not the receiver, you had great fun giving the gift because you knew it was just what the person needed and wanted.

A well-planned charitable gift can bring happiness as well. When you take the time to discover what the needs are and how you can structure your gift to do the most good, you find yourself anticipating the actual gift. You know it will be a hit.

The size of the gift is not necessarily the most enjoyable part. A gift that matches a specific need and accomplishes something worthwhile can be enormously rewarding. For example, an endowment contribution that provides ongoing support for generations to come can elicit a mile-wide smile from everyone concerned.

The Flint Jewish Federation can help you plan an enjoyable gift. Please contact Gary Alter, at 810 767-5922 or fjf@tm.net to find out how to have fun making the perfect gift.

Sue Fishkoff Speaks at Flint Jewish Federation Community Event

Flint Jewish community members who attended a recent Flint Jewish Federation program had the opportunity to hear an "upbeat" presentation from guest speaker, Sue Fishkoff. Below are excerpts from her remarks.

We should not despair over what we perceive is the decline of interest in Jewish life today, especially by the younger generation of Jews. In fact, Jewish life is thriving although it looks different. While there is less interest in some communal agencies, other organizations, such as JCC's, day schools and synagogues, are growing. Fishkoff lists seven current trends in Jewish life that describe the next generation's commitment to Judaism, which are as follows:

1) An increasing interest in spirituality- People are looking for spiritual nourishment and appreciate "G-d talk" in synagogues.

2) Transformation of synagogues- people expect more out of their synagogues than Bar/bat Mitzvahs and High Holidays. People have a large spectrum of needs and as a result, synagogues are turning more into Jewish centers. Synagogues tend to be smaller and often have no building or Rabbi. There is more of an emphasis on participation as opposed to the performance model in which the Rabbi and Cantor pray for you. Some congregations write their own siddurim and machzorim which can be made to reflect the personal lives of the congregants.

3) Increase in Jewish ritual across the denominational spectrum - as an example, Fishkoff noted that some individuals use the mikvah after life changing circumstances (divorce, surgery, and high school trips to Israel.

4) Permeable barriers between the denominations--In the 2000-2001 National Jewish Population Survey, the largest category were those who responded "Just Jewish" as opposed to Reform/Conservative/Orthodox, etc. 85% of the respondents under 40 identified as "Just Jewish."

5) Jewish education (preschools, adult ed., etc.) is thriving. We need to rethink our definition of unaffiliated. Jews can be interested in Judasim even if they do not express their Judasim by joining traditional organizations.

6) This is the golden age of Jewish culture (film festivals, book fairs, TV shows.) Young Jews often express their Jewish identity through innovative Jewish music.

7) Young Jews identify with their Jewish heritage although they express it differently. They read Jewish books, write Jewish books, and there are numerous Jewish blogs and online publications. Young Jews frequently unite (and sometimes combine forces with other religious groups) for social justice activities. The younger Jewish community looks different than prior generations due to intermarriage and conversion. One-half of students in college who identify as being Jewish come from intermarried homes. Jews younger than 45 have never known life without Israel and many view the Holocaust as long ago history.

While these trends reflect vitality in Jewish life today, the next generation

does not feel communal responsibility which has implications for fundraising. In order to instill a sense of community in the next generation, it is critical that we make our children and grandchildren aware of our tzedakah and the specific charities that we support. Explain to this next generation that their financial support is the lifeline to the future of the Jewish community.

Top Israeli Must have Holiday Gadgets, by Brian Blum, Israel 21c

They keep your legs smooth, back up your files, upload your photos from wherever you may be. ISRAEL21c presents has a list of developed-in-Israel gadgets, which may be perfect for the holiday season.

DiskonKey

Dov Moran, founder of Modu, previously hit the big time with his company M-Systems, which developed the very first DiskOnKey (or DiskOnChip as M-Systems originally dubbed it).

The concept is simple enough: Jam up to 64 gigabytes of data onto a tiny gadget no larger than a house key. The latest versions actually look like a key and can hook onto your keychain.

Powermat

How many power cables do you have running under your office desk for all your computers, hard drives, modems, routers, etc.? How about those kitchen appliances and their connections to the sockets? Wouldn't it be great to get rid of the clutter?

That's what promises to do. The Israeli company's technology lets you embed a power grid in just about anything - from a desk to a kitchen counter. Then, with a wireless receiver hidden inside a device, there's no need for plugs anymore. Just position the device or appliance near a power "hotspot" and away it goes.

In a demo on the company's website, a salesperson goes so far as to pour water all over a "Powermatted" kitchen counter - with no burn-outs or electrocutions. Other demonstrations show iPods and Blackberries charging when simply placed on a table.

The company is a joint venture between Michigan-based HoMedics and Israel's Powermat. The first products will be available in time for this winter's shopping season.

Epilady

The story of this gadget is fraught with intrigue. We're talking about a hair removal product invented in Israel that now has copycat versions worldwide. The original Epilady "epilator" was released in 1986. It had a rotating spring that worked by catching hair and pulling it out. It isn't pleasant but, according to women, it works.

Newer versions have more of a tweezer action. Either way, the result is not unlike a waxing treatment, except that you can do it yourself at home, for a fraction of the cost. An Epilady treatment lasts up to four weeks.

Modu

Modu looks something like a cell phone and something like an MP3 player, but isn't really like anything you've ever seen before. Essentially, Modu is a tiny device with cellular capabilities that can be slipped into any number of "jackets" to give it a specific functionality. One jacket transforms Modu into a full MP3 player, in another it's a camera. The plan is to create a mini-economy around Modu accessories.

Eye-Fi

A standard SD card that has built-in WiFi connectivity, Eye-Fi works with all the top cameras and enables you to instantly upload photos/video to one of 25 sites that you specify in advance through the Eye-Fi software.

MobileEye

Another Israeli high-tech company, MobileEye, combines a tiny digital camera with sophisticated algorithms to help drivers navigate their vehicles more safely.

There are many several more high-tech gadgets listed in the article. Visit israel21c.org for more details.

2009 Hanukkah Stamp Available from Postal Service

The 2009 Hanukkah stamp went on sale on Friday, October 9 and should be available at all local post offices. It is the new menorah design. The United States Postal Service has printed a mere 35 million (about one half of what is usually printed for a commemorative stamp) of the Hanukkah stamp. Local post offices will receive only fifteen percent of what they usually get from a new stamp.

If the 2009 Hanukkah stamp is not available at your post office and they tell you, "We never got them," or "We ran out and can't get any more," or any other excuse, please let me know. Send me the town name and zip code of the post office at hanukkah@att.net.

When you buy Hanukkah stamps don't just buy enough for your Hanukkah cards. Buy 100 or more and use them on all your mail through the holiday season and beyond. I buy 200 and use them on all my mail for the entire year.

The United States Postal service claims "a lack of demand" as the reason for not issuing a new Hanukkah stamp design every year. I don't believe this to be true. This season is the first of the new menorah design, and I already know that this design will be repeated next year. Help raise the demand and encourage more frequent design changes.

- Ronald Scheiman - www.hanukkahstampquest.com

Best Wishes for a very Happy Hanukkah

Wishing Everyone a Happy Hanukkah

Jewish Federations of North America Update on Rescue of Yemen Jews

One day recently in the village of Monsey, N.Y., a new Jewish immigrant from Yemen stood outside her house, staring in disbelief at the mezuzah affixed to the doorpost. Asked if there was a problem, the immigrant expressed shock that she could freely and openly display this Jewish symbol, something she was forbidden to do in Yemen.

Over the past year, UJC/The Jewish Federations of North America and our domestic and overseas partners including The Jewish Agency for Israel have been conducting a major humanitarian effort to help rescue some of the last remaining Jews of Yemen and resettle them in the United States and in Israel.

Throughout this effort, UJC/Federations have worked with our historic partner in aliyah and klitah, the Jewish Agency, to encourage the remaining Yemenite Jews to make aliyah to Israel – though some preferred to immigrate to the United States as they had close family members here.

Including this woman, 62 Yemenite Jews have come to the United States and an undetermined number are expected to follow.

Her story and those of the other Jews of Yemen underscore the very reasons The Jewish Federations of North America first launched this effort to help this impoverished and threatened community.

There are some 200 Jews remaining scattered throughout Yemen today, the last vestiges of an ancient community, most of which made its way to Israel in two major airlifts nearly 50 years ago.

This latest humanitarian initiative, first reported last spring, has focused on the emigration, resettlement and absorption in Israel and the United States of this ancient Jewish community, which has been increasingly threatened by anti-Jewish violence. Over a year ago, a young rabbi was shot dead by Islamic militants, and the community has reported increasing incidents of stone-throwing, verbal harassment and intimidation.

The U.S. portion of this effort has involved an unusually broad partnership that involves the UJC/Federations; the U.S. State Department [HIAS, the international migration agency of the American Jewish community; UJA/Federation of New York; the social service agency FECS; the Jewish Federation of Rockland County, N.Y.; the New York Legal Assistance Group; the United Jewish Organization of Williamsburg and the Rockland County Department of Social Services.

To date, some 65 Federations and HIAS have pledged more than $700,000 to help rescue and resettle those wishing to come to the United States. The UJC/Federations-funded JAFI has brought additional Yemenite Jews to Israel as part of this broad effort.

The U.S. arrivals are being resettled in the village of Monsey, about 30 miles outside New York City. Since Monsey is home to many observant groups, from modern Orthodox to Chasidic, and houses an array of Jewish institutions from schools to businesses as well as an existing group of Yemenite immigrants, it was deemed a good fit for this highly traditional community.

Since their arrival began in July, the immigrants have been provided resettlement services by the coalition involved. Children are being enrolled in well-known New York State-accredited schools affiliated with the Orthodox and Chasidic movements, and will be given culturally appropriate educational opportunities as well. New families are also being provided with food, housing, medical care, child care, mental health services, cultural adjustment counseling, language training, employment training and advice.

Besides initial announcements to the Federations, and a flurry of early press reports, some of which erroneously reported that UJC/Federations were working with Satmar organizations, the groups involved have tried to conduct this initiative quietly, due to concerns by the Yemenites for the safety of their relatives remaining in Yemen, and by U.S. State Department and other officials that wider publicity could endanger the entire effort. A Wall Street Journal story has appeared about the effort, increasing the likelihood of further attention.

Those refugees who have arrived in the United States say they lived in fear in Yemen. The men said they hid their payot (sidecurls) and yarmulkes, the women wore Arab garments, and the community did not maintain public institutions. Some of the men said they never left their prayer books in one location, lest they be damaged or destroyed. None of these Jews had ever built a sukkah, and did for the first time this year.

Immigration Vital to Economy: by Gideon Aronoff and Genia Brin

The following appeared in a November 12 issue of the New York Daily News.

Immigrants - and immigration - have provided significant fuel for America's growth and prosperity since the beginning days of our country.

American values and beliefs; businesses and homes, and military and infrastructure have been shaped by the millions of immigrants who have arrived on our shores over the centuries. Unfortunately, the current national debate over immigration often has become so bitter that an important fact has been obscured: Immigrants contribute a wealth of new strengths and ideas to America.

Some, like Genia's son Sergey, co-founder of Google, literally will change the world. Assisted by the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, the Brins came to America in 1979, hoping to escape the repression and persecution of Jews in the Soviet Union. Without the nurturing education and system of free enterprise that Sergey experienced growing up here, it is questionable whether Google would even exist today.

Others - like the immigrant founders and co-founders of Intel, Sun Microsystems, eBay and Yahoo! - also will make contributions that will change both our country and the world in incalculable ways.

Not all immigrants will end up as technology superstars. Most will apply themselves to improving the lives of their families. In doing so, they become the key to our economic recovery.

The Kauffman Index of Entrepreneurial Activity reports that immigrant women are starting businesses at a rate 57% higher than native-born women, and immigrant men are starting businesses at a rate 71% higher than native-born men. New businesses mean new jobs, and that, more than anything, is what our economy needs. The index also reports that the increase in immigrants starting businesses between 2007 and 2008 focused on those of low and medium income.

Smaller businesses often are started by immigrant families who pool their resources to run these businesses as a unit. The mutual support families provide one another enable small businesses to thrive, creating even more jobs. Although suggestions to increase the number of visas for skilled workers are valid, with family unity as key to the economic success of new immigrants, it is critical that this increase not come at the expense of available family visas.

As for immigrant workers' affect on native workers' ability to obtain jobs and living wages, the Immigration Policy Center has observed that immigrants mostly complement - rather than compete with - native workers because of their unique education and skill sets, as well as the interdependency of their jobs. This is because immigrants are strongly concentrated in jobs that demand either extremely high skills or very few skills, filling employment needs unmet by native workers at each end of the employment spectrum.

The energy and industriousness of immigrants is the stuff of American legend. The dollar value that immigrants add to the economy is measured in figures that would be

Jewish Agency Leaders and Federation Colleagues Pitch in to Replace Stolen Goat Herd

Children living at the Jewish Agency's Ben Yakir's Youth Village, which is home to 120 at-risk youth, were shocked to find their prized animal corner burglarized and all 53 goats gone. The police, who were called in, said the three men had entered the zoo overnight and stolen the animals.

Ben Yakir Youth Village is known for its animal therapy program, and the zoo, which includes — in addition to the goats — horses, sheep rabbits, birds and an ostrich, is maintained almost entirely by the youth, and helps them in their social and emotional development. Ben Yakir is one of four Jewish Agency Villages for youth at high risk, many children of new immigrant families. Youth and staff alike were shocked by the loss of the animals, and the Youth Village director wrote a letter describing the incident.

Within hours, Jewish Agency lay leaders, staff and colleagues from several federations pitched in and by the end of the day enough money was raised to replace the entire stolen flock. Each goat costs approximately $120.

Staff at Ben Yakir have already contacted an animal herder to replace the goats; a surveillance camera and fencing will be installed around the zoo as well.

"It was heart warming to see the immediate response to restoring the stolen goats" said Maxyne Finkelstein, CEO of the Jewish Agency in North America who coordinated the quick fundraising effort. "Everyone understood immediately that these animals are both pets and a means of helping troubled children build confidence and skills."

unimaginable to those who arrived in the great waves of immigration in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The White House Council of Economic Advisers estimates that immigration adds $37 billion to U.S. Gross Domestic Product each year. Plus, all documented immigrants - as well as many undocumented workers - pay the same taxes as other taxpayers.

Their contributions help schools, roads, bridges, libraries and other public services.

Yet none of these economic benefits of immigration are sustainable under our current outdated and restrictive immigration laws. At the moment, legislative proposals pending in Congress include bills to reunite immigrants with their spouses and children, who currently are waiting years to join their family members in the United States; give undocumented immigrant students access to legal status and a chance to serve our country in the military or pursue higher education, and legalize undocumented farmworkers.

These should be enacted quickly, but they are only the start on the road to a more just and compassionate immigration system that supports and encourages immigrants rather than deters and discourages them.

We need immigrants from all socioeconomic backgrounds as much as they need the freedom and opportunity that America provides. And if the past is any indication of the future, we will see many more immigrants giving back to society in ways that are truly remarkable. They are the fuel that fires our economic engines.
